Blizzard Entertainment was founded by Mike Morhaime, while Treyarch was founded by Danny Bilson, Paul Debevec, and Jason West. Later, around the time of Star Wars: The New Republic, Treyarch was split into two teams and was renamed Vicarious Visions, while Blizzard Entertainment remained its identity. Blizzard acquired Vicarious Visions in 2011 and would become its own game studio. After 2007, a handful of senior members left the studio for other projects and Blizzard became a "bigger fish in a smaller pond."

With so many employees and game projects from the title up to the Battle for Azeroth expansion, the internal politics and project lead changes within the studio could have created instability. The studio then suffered a lot of criticism and backlash from the community, mostly due to the company's handling of World of Warcraft: Mists of Pandaria, a controversial expansion that removed the class system of the game. A romantic comedy starring Brendan Fraser. .
