"There was no indication that it was a criminal enterprise," said Mueller, noting that the robbers were believed to be three men. "There's no indication that there was a specific target here.... The investigation is still ongoing." There were $13 million in losses at Countrywide Financial Corp. stemming from the March 22 robbery at Bank of America's offices in the posh Los Angeles suburb of Century City. The executives were unharmed and are cooperating with the investigation, company spokesman Darrel Doane said. That's a stunningly high loss rate for any loan-processing business, and one in which the company's primary business -- issuing loans to non-bank mortgage brokers -- would seem to have the advantage of being able to select borrowers with a certain minimum credit score. But the losses, which came on top of the loss of about $3.7 billion in loans made under the mortgage-insurance debacle, make the Countrywide losses even more stunning. Losses were running in the tens of billions of dollars. About 5% of Countrywide's loans were subprime, which are loans to people with poor credit. Countrywide had nearly two-thirds of the subprime business in the country. The wildest guesses on the Street indicate that Countrywide's subprime losses could run as high as $17 billion, and far beyond that, once the real loss estimates are calculated. And this is a bank. All of this is being run by Bank of America. In fact, this was Bank of America's third largest subprime lender, the one dealing in mortgages for people with poor credit. Countrywide executives pointedly sought to distance themselves from the subprime mess when they announced losses on Wednesday, because they blamed the deteriorating housing market, not their bad ca3bfb1094

1. Technical Field The present invention relates to a recording apparatus capable of recording information of an image on a print medium. 2. Related Art There is known a recording apparatus that is equipped with a feeder that is attached to a tray of a print medium and feeds a print medium to a conveyance path that conveys a recording medium to a recording head and records an image on the print medium. For example, JP-A-2011-134719 describes a recording apparatus that is equipped with a movable unit that can be moved from a printer main body to a conveyance path and that includes a tray that is attached to the movable unit and that holds a print medium and a recording head that performs a recording operation on the print medium held on the tray. The recording apparatus includes a first drive means that moves the movable unit from a first position to a second position that is located on a side of the tray. In the recording apparatus described in JP-A-2011-134719, when the movable unit is moved from the first position to the second position, the print medium held on the tray moves together with the movable unit. Therefore, the print medium can be moved from a state in which the print medium is inserted into the conveyance path in a state in which the print medium is in contact with the recording head to a state in which the print medium is separated from the recording head. Therefore, in this recording apparatus, a waiting time of the print medium that has been fed from the feeder to the conveyance path can be shortened. However, according to the configuration described in JP-A-2011-134719, the recording apparatus is configured so that the first drive means is provided at a position on a side of the tray and the movable unit is driven between the first position and the second position by the first drive means. Therefore, in this recording apparatus, the distance between the first drive means and the tray is relatively long. In other words, in the configuration described in JP-A-2011-134719, the distance between the tray and the first drive means is large. Therefore, it is difficult to reduce a size of the apparatus. The present invention relates to a film constituting an image information recording medium, in which the image information is exposed and then recorded. Heretofore, various types of image recording materials (exposed photosensitive materials) are known. Of these, especially well-known are silver salt photographic materials
