In total, six students — three Berkeley undergraduates and three graduate students — were arrested on suspicion of violating campus policy, according to the university's Public Safety website. Police reported finding six marijuana joints, a pipe and $4,250 in cash in the dorm room of one of the students. The dorm room was locked. The university notified parents at the time of Friday's arrests, a university spokeswoman said. Berkeley police spokesman Sgt. Andrew Frankel confirmed the arrests. He said that police responded to the residence hall on Bowditch Way, where they found a student smoking marijuana in the room and six people together in a common area of the residence hall. The students were booked into Berkeley jail for possession and drug-related felonies. Berkeley police then went to the school and were able to get the names and current addresses of the individuals arrested. Berkeley police notified parents and advised them to contact their children's schools, according to Frankel. He said that children whose parents want to be notified should be at home at the time of the arrest. Berkeley University Police Chief Craig Andres said Friday that police caution students that marijuana use is not allowed on campus. "Bouncers at the door recognize them and can be suspicious as to why students have the substance," Andres said. "It also provides a distraction." According to public safety's website, marijuana is prohibited on campus "in any amount or form." Andres said that minors can be arrested for smoking marijuana on campus even with parental supervision. In addition to the arrest of Friday's incident, police made at least six other arrests for students violating the university's alcohol policy, Frankel said. He said police made multiple arrests of students going into a building with the Visitors to four north Jersey hospitals are up to 20 times more likely to be diagnosed with AIDS following the exposure to a severely contaminated condom, the state Health Department revealed Friday. The Health Department estimates that at least 17 people have been infected in state-licensed healthcare facilities after patients were exposed to the contaminated latex condom during the past five years. One patient was recently diagnosed with full-blown AIDS and now in the final stage of her illness, the department said. "While there have not been any deaths associated with the exposures, it is certainly a very disturbing issue," Dr. Jennifer Newman, the health commissioner, said in a statement. The department is still investigating the source of the contamination. The 4-year-old study is the first of its kind to look at whether common medical practices lead to the spread of the AIDS virus within hospitals. Newman acknowledged that the investigation is challenging because it involves tracking down every patient who was exposed to the contaminated latex condom, and because hospitals may have hired physicians who no longer see patients or serve as hospital staff. The department reviewed every patient who was exposed to the contaminated condom between 2002 and 2007 and identified 171 cases, but could not track down all of them, Newman said. "I think this
