Characteristics of the fibroblast growth factor/FGF receptor (FGFR) system during the period of tooth initiation and early development in the rat molar germ. The fibroblast growth factor (FGF) family consists of at least 18 mitogens and morphogens that are thought to play a critical role in both embryonic and postembryonic development. These growth factors activate a single tyrosine kinase receptor, FGF receptor, which is composed of three parts: an intracellular domain, a single transmembrane segment, and an extracellular domain. We have cloned and sequenced the FGF-receptor genes from the developing rat molar tooth germ, as well as from the mouse and chick tooth germ. We have determined that the earliest tooth-specific FGF receptor messenger RNA appears at about the onset of enamel formation. This is followed by the appearance of an FGF 3 receptor messenger RNA that is specifically expressed in the epithelium during the initiation of enamel formation and thereafter in the enamel-forming epithelium. A second FGF receptor messenger RNA is first expressed in the mesenchyme at the end of the cap stage of enamel formation. Furthermore, FGF-2 is specifically expressed in the mesenchyme between the future enamel and dentin at the cap stage of enamel formation and in the primary and secondary enamel knot at the late bell stage of enamel formation. Enamel matrix proteins mRNAs were also observed to be first present in the mesenchyme prior to the appearance of the enamel knot at the bell stage of enamel formation. This correlation

The size of this data is around 2Gb. Then i am calculating the eigenvector associated to the eigenvalue. I am using MATLAB for the PCA. When I try to use the Standardize option, it doesn't give me the output. Can someone explain what am I doing wrong? Thank you very much. A: Check that your data is centered and scaled before you compute PCA. Good Morning Good
