to drink. I just want to reassure you that making chocolate milk is generally safe for most people. Yes, chocolate milk is still, well, chocolate milk. But, like many things, it is good to know if you are putting something in your body that is not the normal type of food. Chocolate milk is rich in flavonoids and other antioxidants that provide health benefits. However, because it is not a whole food, it does have some risks if you choose to drink it in significant quantities. Here's an example of the risks. One risk of drinking chocolate milk is that it may stain your teeth. Because of the high amount of fat in milk, it is easy for dairy products to get lodged on teeth, stain them, and even create cavities. Another risk is that it may contain milk proteins that can trigger an allergic reaction. Finally, there is one risk related to your body's natural ability to process sugar. This is the risk of developing diabetes or setting the stage for diabetes. Let's take a look at the risks. Milk Stains When dairy products get on your teeth, it is not safe to brush them off. If your teeth are stained, you can try brushing your teeth and then putting in some toothpaste. As you may be learning, a simple way to reduce the risk of milk stains is to not drink milk. Milk Proteins Cows have the ability to synthesize the proteins in their milk. Chickens, 6d1f23a050
